

How do you know if a healthcare sprint is right for you?

What is the impact if the potential solution fails?

LOW	MEDIUM	HIGH
Projects with very little risk are better suited to solve with a different process.	Could failure have an impact on your user or service? Other points of failure include resources, investment and opportunity cost.

Does the opportunity align with organizational goals?

STRATEGIC PRIORITY ALIGNMENT	NO ALIGNMENT
Opportunities that benefit the most from healthcare sprints are those that have leadership support and align with organizational strategic objectives.	If it doesn't align with strategic goals you need leadership support. Get your boss on board!

How complex is the problem?

SIMPLE	COMPLICATED	COMPLEX
If your problem is fairly basic, a healthcare sprint is going to feel excessive.	Healthcare sprints break down complexity and define what is required for all parties to succeed when you are not sure of the destination and how to get there.

Do you already have an idea or solution to the problem?

YES	NO
Either answer is a winner! Healthcare sprints work great for new ideas, current solutions, emerging problems, and new opportunities.

Into what stage of proof does the idea fall?

DESIRABLE	POSSIBLE	DOABLE
Healthcare sprints are structured to answer the desirability question fast. If your idea has not yet proven desirable, you should not be spending time or resources on features and functionality	If you have already proven desirability via user input then a healthcare sprint will feel redundant.

What is the level of confidence that your idea is right?

LOW	MEDIUM	HIGH
Research alone is not enough. Healthcare sprints ensure that you are getting buy-in from the right stakeholders from the beginning.		If your idea is a "no-brainer", a healthcare sprint is going to produce few new learnings or insights.

Yes! A healthcare sprint is right for you!

You're ready to start prepping your sprint, or find a healthcare sprint master to take on this challenge with you. Good luck!
